ABSTRACT

The bibliography covers the history of the labor movement in the United States from Colonial times through the 1970s. It has been compiled almost entirely from books and periodicals available in the California Polytechnic State University Library at San Luis Obispo, California. Most of the entries have been published since the 1930s, with almost one-half published since the 1960s. The sources range from scholarly journals to short articles in popular magazines. The bibliography contains listed works about significant individuals such as William H. Taft, Joe Hill, and Henry Ford. Citations are given for books and articles focusing on collective bargaining, American Federation of Labor, New Deal, steel, and strikes. The 1,560 entries are numbered consecutively in alphabetical order by author. A subject index of 295 terms is provided as a reference to various aspects of the labor movement. Format includes author, source, pages, and date. A journal source list concludes the bibliography. (Author/AV)

PREFACE

This bibliography covers the history of the labor movement in the United States from Colonial times through the present. It has been drawn almost entirely from books and periodicals available in the California Polytechnic State University Library at San Luis Obispo, California.

Books and articles are arranged in one alphabet. Each entry is numbered sequentially and corresponds to a number in the subject index.

The objective of this bibliography was to include all information regarding the development of organized labor available in the CPSU collection. No absolute guarantee of successfully attaining this objective is claimed.

The entries represent a wide range of sources from scholarly journals to short pieces in popular magazines.

The subject index is designed to afford a quick and easy mini-bibliography of various facets of the labor movement and especially for the undergraduate.
